GeoOp shortlisted for NZ Hi-Tech Awards

GeoOp is pleased to announce it has been named as a finalist in the Duncan Cotterill Innovative Hi-Tech Software Product category for the 2015 New Zealand Hi-Tech Awards.

A NZ Hi-Tech Award is one of the technology sector's most sought-after accolades. They have been awarded over the years to New Zealand's most successful high-tech companies, and highest achieving individuals.

Tim McFarlane CMO of GeoOp says, "We're very proud to be recognised as a finalist in the hotly contested 'Innovative Hi-Tech Software' category. It pays testament to the fantastic support we receive from customers in over 35 countries and the world class work the GeoOp team do."

This year's international judges include renowned American business strategist, Gary Hamel; co-founder of Apple, Steve Wozniak; founder of Massive, Claudia Batten; Director of Engineering for Google in New York, Craig Nevill-Manning; Senior Vice President for Cisco, Howard Charney; Andy Lark; CMO of Xero and Managing Director for IDG Ventures, Pat Kenealy.

Winners will be announced on 15th May in Wellington.
